Greetings from RSU #24

It is hard to believe another school year is in the books! Our students and staff were definitely ready for the end of the school year. We will now begin the process of getting ready for the next school year. For those planning ahead, the first day of school is scheduled for Thursday, August 29th. Until then, I wish our students and staff a relaxing summer.

We do have a number of people retiring from the RSU who have served the students and the district for many years. These people have made the ultimate long-term commitment to our district and deserve our debt of gratitude. I would like to recognize the following individuals for their years of service:

- Nancy Cramer - Teacher @ Cave Hill/Sumner Middle School- 10 years
 - Cathy Johnson - Adult Education - 12 years
 - Glenn Grant - Transportation - 15 years
 - Wayne Newenham - Maintenance @ Sumner - 21 years
 - Joe Naumann - Maintenance @ Peninsula - 22 years
 - Bonnie Naumann - Maintenance @ Peninsula - 24 years
 - Tink Davis - Maintenance @ Cave Hill - 26 years
 - John Wells - Teacher @ Sumner - 44 years (John will be returning)
 - Faye Torrey - Kitchen @ Peninsula - 50 years WOW***
- We wish each one of these individuals the best in their retirement.

I am happy to pass along that the RSU #24 Budget Referendum was successful, with a vote of 885 to 420. Here is the breakdown by town:

Eastbrook: 35-18	Mariaville: 57-18	Sullivan: 128-57
Franklin: 93-66	Sorrento: 51-40	Waltham: 54-20
Gouldsboro: 313-137	Steuben: 57-41	Winter Harbor: 97-23

Thank you for your continued support of the school district. If you have any questions or concerns, please reach out to me at meastman@rsu24.org.

Hello, my name is Mike Hiser.

I am a past Fire Chief here in Sullivan, and I initiated the EMS service at the fire department. I was the first EMT for the town and helped plenty of residents of Sullivan during my service.

Now, I'm asking for your help. My daughter, Amanda, has suffered from Lupus most of her adult life.

At a recent consult at a wellness center in Florida, they also found she has Lyme, heavy metal sickness, a parasite, and suffers from kidney failure.

She can't get the treatment she needs in Maine but the wellness center can help.

The problem is money. Her insurance won't cover out of state treatment.

She has a Go Fund Me set up at gofund.me/598ad08a.

Any and all donations would be greatly appreciated. Thank you.

Extreme heat: Staying safe if you have health issues

Lung conditions, heart disease, diabetes and other factors make your body more vulnerable to heat.

July 13, 2023

By Harvard Health Publishing Staff

Reviewed by Howard E. LeWine, MD, Chief Medical Editor, Harvard Health Publishing

It's only July, yet crushing heat waves have hovered over parts of the US this summer. And dangerous, sometimes deadly heat waves are increasingly common around the globe.

Heat combined with humidity — or high temperatures alone — can make it difficult for your body to cool off sufficiently, especially if you have a chronic health condition such as asthma, heart disease, or diabetes. Here's what you need to know.

Which health conditions require special attention when heat rises?

Most of us know someone who is at risk from too much heat. Older people, and anyone taking medicine that affects the body's ability to hold onto water, such as diuretics, may be more vulnerable to heat illness. If you have any of the following conditions, it's important to be cautious during days when the heat index is high.

- Heart disease: Heat may increase the chances of heart attacks, heart arrhythmias, and heart failure.
- Asthma: Anyone with asthma, especially children, may find it more difficult to breathe on hot days. Some evidence suggests that inhalers stored in extreme heat may not work as well, possibly dispensing less than a full dose of medication.
- Lung conditions: Heat can irritate the lungs, causing flare-ups for adults who smoke, or have asthma or chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) — even for those spending most of their time indoors. Heat also increases ozone air pollution and the risk of dehydration, both of which can make breathing more difficult.
- Mental health: There's strong evidence of more instances of suicide, homicide, and violent crime on extremely hot days. Heat may also influence symptom severity in people with mood disorders and schizophrenia.
- Diabetes: People who have type 1 or type 2 diabetes have a harder time regulating body temperature and blood glucose when it gets hot out. Extreme heat can also damage insulin, insulin pumps, and glucose monitors.
- Pregnancy: Higher temperatures and air pollution may increase the risk that a baby is born too early or with a low birthweight.

Protect yourself from the damage of chronic inflammation.

Science has proven that chronic, low-grade inflammation can turn into a silent killer that contributes to cardiovascular disease, cancer, type 2 diabetes and other conditions. Get simple tips to fight inflammation and stay healthy — from Harvard Medical School experts.

How else does extreme heat affect the body?

Anyone can experience an imbalance of essential minerals in the blood known as electrolytes during periods of extreme heat. But this is especially true for people with diabetes, heart disease or abnormal kidney function. When this occurs, a person may feel fatigue, nausea, or a headache. In extreme instances, heart attack, irregular heart rhythms (arrhythmia), or problems with other organs may occur. Data from millions of people enrolled in Medicare show that hospital admissions during heat waves lasting two or more days are most often due to heat stroke, sunstroke, fluid and electrolyte imbalances, and acute kidney failure. Among older adults, heightened risk for hospital admission lasted up to five days after the hottest day.

Put a cooling plan into action

Keep it simple: learn how to avoid, spot, and treat heat-related illness, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention advises. Right now, we do not have sufficient evidence to recommend actions like changing medication regimens, or staying indoors at one temperature and not others. Talk to your doctor about your situation, and take steps to take control of your health when it's hot outside.

- Have a plan in place for staying cool at home or going to a neighborhood cooling center. Don't wait for a heat alert before taking action if you have a chronic health problem or take multiple medicines. Your personal risk of getting sick from the heat may increase at temperatures below when heat alerts are often called, or sometimes when heat alerts aren't called at all.
- Check a weather forecast first thing in the morning and pay attention to days that are hotter than usual for where you live — and especially to how being outside on those days may affect your health. The New York Times maps dangerous heat zones and offers a heat index forecast for major cities and locales across the US.
- If your symptoms are already flaring on days when it will be hot outside, you'll need to be more cautious about going out. If you do go outside, try to stay in the shade. Stay alert to how you're feeling and find a cool place inside if you feel symptoms arise. Stay hydrated by drinking water and drinks that replenish electrolytes. Some sports drinks have electrolytes but may have lots of sugar. That can be a problem for people with diabetes, so read labels carefully.

The bottom line

Climate change makes it likely we will experience longer and hotter heat waves. If you have existing health conditions, take steps now to protect your health. Talk to your doctor about how heat might affect you, and decide on a plan to help you stay cool. Staying informed and attuned to any symptoms you experience will help.
